

Abstract: Effective usage of human attention is fundamental to the success of technology, especially with the growing increases in multitasking practices. While today's technology is designed for increased efficiency, such efficiency cannot be achieved without consideration of the person who will use the technology. In this talk I will talk about how theories of human cognition informs development of technology with safety and efficiency in mind. The talk will touch upon autonomous vehicles, desktop productivity and social media.